Sure! If it's a book that I've read too, and my loved one now has a chance to read, this gives us an opportunity to actually deepen our relationship by discussing whatever it is we've now both read. I love talking about books with my friends and family, whether it's fiction or nonfiction.

Part 2 & Part 3

Describe one of your family members you spend the most time with

You should say:

- Who this person is?
- When are you usually together?
- What do you do together?

And explain why you spend most time with this member of your family?

I come from a nuclear family that comprises my father, mother, an older brother and me. Out of all these people, I spend a majority of my time with my father. He is a understanding and caring person. We have a lot in common and have spent a large amount of time talking and sharing with each other.

With time, he became my best friend. I can rely on him and trust him blindly. We share our interests with each other, for examples coffee stories, old past memories or even my career plans, and good or bad experiences that I've been through in my life. Not just that, I also share my love lives with my boyfriend. Sometimes we fight like cats and dogs, basically due to the gap generation between the young and the old. But to be honest, he is a good listener. Because he is older than me ages so each word he says that sounds extremely logical and intellectual.

When not outside, we are usually together the entire day. We watch shows on TV and prepare meals together. Whenever I don't feel good, he is always there to encourage me and treat me good food to wipe out my sadness. He is very skilled at making dishes with chicken. And the fact that I often feel better after enjoying meals with him.

You know, I still remember correctly that he used to stay up all night long to take care of me at the time I got bad fever. He knew that I hate eating porridge so he prepared hot fish soup for me instead. I would say that he is a very important person to me and in my lifetime.

In spite of its benefits, some people argued that the Internet has produced many problematic issues for societies. In my perspective, I strongly agree with this argument because of the addiction to the internet and inaccurate information.

First of all, there is a high feeling of need in using the internet in individuals that caused by the overuse of it. It means that many people nowadays cannot separate themselves from the Internet every second. For example, some individuals always share their moments every minute on their social media platforms. As a result, this causes the urgency in surfing the Internet. Hence, these overwhelming features of the Internet make individuals feel addicted.

Another problem is that many people cannot differentiate between a fact or a hoax. On the internet, there is a myriad of news portals some of which have questionable reputations regarding the accuracy of their news. Unfortunately, lots of our communities cannot analyze the information they received whether it is true or not, but they still share it on the public internet platform. Moreover, some news is published on the internet portals to accommodate particular interests. Therefore, many people have lost their integrity because they get some false information on the Internet.

In summary, although the Internet offers some benefits, I strongly believe that the Internet creates troublesome matters due to the necessity of using it and the emergence of false information.
